

I'm registering a complaint about Janet Jackson exposing her breast during the SuperBowl half-time show on Sunday, February 1. My nine year old son and three year old daughter were dancing to the show's music, when, due to the crass lyrics and general behavior of the performers, I turned off the broadcast. It's a good thing they did not see Janet Jackson's stripping. However, no surprise that her televised nudity was the talk of the town at my nine year old's elementary school. He reported that he knew all that Janet Jackson had done during the show, by what he heard from his classmates. This is simply unacceptable broadcasting. CBS has got to be held accountable for the live feed and should be fined. Janet Jackson is also personally accountable for her indecent actions on national television and should be fined. The show promoters must be fined for not closely monitoring the content of their show. The CBS affiliates must have seen the telecast just ahead enough of its viewers to block the transmission; if so, the affiliates should be fined as well. The CBS affiliate broadcasting the SuperBowl was WRAL TV-Channel 5 in Raleigh, NC.
